

Subject Company: Range Resources Corporation
(Commission File No. 001-12209)

Set forth below is a transcript from an interview given by Toby Z. Rice, President and Chief Executive Officer of EQT Corporation (“EQT”), to CNBC on October 29, 2026 regarding EQT’s proposed acquisition (the “proposed transaction”) of Range Resources Corporation (“Range”) pursuant to the Agreement and Plan of Merger, dated as of October 25, 2026 (the “Merger Agreement”), by and among EQT, EQT Holdings LLC, Rhino Merger Sub Inc., Rhino Merger Sub LLC and Range:

Brian Sullivan, CNBC:

Let’s talk about a major energy deal that happened earlier this week. Pittsburgh-based EQT is buying Range Resources in an all-stock deal valued at $13 billion, or about $50 billion including debt and enterprise value. This huge natural gas deal brings together two of the biggest producers in Pennsylvania and parts of Appalachia, and it easily creates the largest natural gas producer in the United States. Joining us now in a CNBC exclusive is EQT CEO Toby Rice. Toby, good to have you back on. Appreciate you joining us. Know It’s been a busy week. Why the deal? Why buy Range Resources?

Toby Rice, EQT:

The question is, what happens when you take America’s natural gas champion and bolt on one of the highest-quality asset bases right next door with Range Resources? When you combine those entities, you create America’s undisputed natural gas champion. Even with this premium that we paid, we’ve still been able to present a deal that is accretive on value metrics like free cash flow per share and nav per share.

Most importantly, we’ve created a higher-quality business that regardless of what metric that matters in creating value in energy, EQT is on the top of the charts across the board: cost structure, balance sheet strength, inventory depth, and marketing platform size. This is a company that’s positioned for really tremendous, sustainable growth potential.

Brian Sullivan, CNBC:

I know they’re headquartered in Texas, but its operations are in your backyard: southwestern Pennsylvania and the Appalachian region. I’d imagine there are huge economies of scale and synergies available once the deal closes.

Toby Rice, EQT:

Absolutely. This is an asset we are very familiar with. We’ve been watching Range Resources since they pioneered the Marcellus Shale 20 years ago, and they’ve been a world-class operator ever since. Because of the industrial logic of combining our asset bases is one of the reasons why people have been asking for this deal, and we’re happy to be able to bring that today.

That industrial logic drives a lot of the synergies we’ve identified, and those synergies will supercharge our ability to continue to grow on our free-cash-flow-per-share journey. The synergies that we’ve announced will be over $625 million in synergies. About half are base operating synergies, such as capturing corporate overhead. The other half are going to be really what the deal is all about which is capturing long-term upside. This is gonna be about optimizing midstream infrastructure and, most importantly, capturing the tremendous demand we see shaping up in the Appalachian Basin.

Brian Sullivan, CNBC:

Two more quick questions, since it's a busy day. I know you're not a pure AI company, but your gas powers the plants that power a lot of AI. You're on the front lines of this. Are you seeing any slowdown in AI power-related demand?

Toby Rice, EQT:

Yeah Sully actually what we're seeing is this momentum continues to grow. When you're looking for energy in Appalachia, you are calling Appalachia's natural gas champion EQT, and we've been assembled that demand. Alongside this deal that we've announced with Range, we put that forecast out there, we're seeing what was 20 Bcf (billion cubic feet) per day has now grown to over 25 Bcf per day. Admittedly, that's across a range of probabilities.

But when you look at what this deal does for EQT, combining Range Resources which produces about 2.5 Bcf per day, with a productive capacity of almost 5 Bcf per day. EQT produces 8 Bcf per day gross, with a productive capacity of 12 Bcf per day. Put those two together, and we have productive capacity of over 17 Bcf per day relative to this opportunity set. We're not just positioned to take a piece of this demand. We're looking to take a significant majority. And it's only gonna happen with a world-class marketing team, a great midstream growth team, the ability to leverage the infrastructure we have in place that we can build in the future, and a continued commitment to providing the cheapest, most reliable energy to our customers.

Brian Sullivan, CNBC:

Next week I'm covering a story I've been following for five years: Europe's reliance on American natural gas to keep the lights and heat on, especially after the Nord Stream – somebody just randomly blew up the Nord stream. We still don't know who but either way, how critical is your gas- American natural gas to Europe right now?

Toby Rice, EQT:

It's absolutely critical. Just look at the price action since the Middle East conflict occurred, where we saw 20% of the world's LNG be prevented from entering the market. We've seen international natural gas prices move from about $10 to now they're over $30 per million BTU.

What's most important for viewers at home to recognize is that thankfully, thanks to our energy independence thanks to the great work that pioneers like Range Resources and EQT have done to bring energy independence to America, we have safeguarded Americans from these geopolitical shocks when it comes to natural gas. While prices internationally are $30, in the U.S they're about $3. That is giving a tremendous economic advantage to American consumers something we're incredibly proud of that. But America's energy security is dependent on global energy security. We need to continue to unleash U.S. LNG to provide energy security to the world while creating more economic stability for this country.

Brian Sullivan, CNBC:

Toby Rice, CEO of EQT, with a big $50 billion deal for Range Resources. Toby, we appreciate you taking the time. Thank you very much.
